

Placedon — Brand Kit Reference

This document consolidates every brand decision made so far, so future materials stay consistent without re-deriving them from scratch.

Color Palette

Ink Navy — #0B0F1A

Primary background color. Used as the dominant tone across all cinematic/photographic materials.

Deep Navy (alt) — #0E1526

Secondary background variant, used interchangeably with Ink Navy depending on generation.

Brass Gold — #C9A24B

Primary accent. Rule: use once per composition. This is a restraint color, not a decoration — it marks the single most important element (a checkmark, a light source, a headline), never a background or a repeated pattern.

Muted Gold — #9F743B

Secondary accent, used for body-weight text on dark backgrounds where full Brass Gold would be too loud (captions, fine print, citation text).

Warm Cream — #F4EFE6

Primary text color on dark backgrounds.

Soft Cream — #D8CFC0

Secondary/subheadline text color on dark backgrounds, slightly recessed from Warm Cream.

Cool Grey — #5B6472

Reserved for the "unknown, abstained, not verified" state — used only when representing something Placedon explicitly does not claim to know. Never used decoratively.

Typography

Display / Headline

A serif with real ink weight — Freight Display, Canela, or GT Sectra. Used for headlines only. Perfect symmetry and centered alignment should be avoided; a human designer rarely lets type breathe evenly.

Citation / Verbatim text

A monospace or slab typeface — IBM Plex Mono or Courier Prime. Reserved specifically for quoted statutory text, to visually signal "this is quoted exactly," not paraphrased.

Body / Supporting text

A clean sans-serif, wide letter-spacing for small print and fine-print captions.

Voice and Tone

Restraint over hype. One accent color, minimal copy, quiet confidence rather than loud claims.

Never oversell. Avoid generic startup language — "revolutionary," "AI-powered," "game-changing." The product's actual differentiator is honesty, not ambition.

The core promise, stated the same way everywhere: it only answers when it can point to the exact source, and says so when it can't.

No inflated numbers, projections, or roadmap claims in anything shown externally until they are actually validated.

Photography and Imagery Style

Editorial, not stock. Shot-on-camera aesthetic, referencing specific real equipment in generation prompts — for example Canon EOS R5 with an 85mm f/1.4 lens, or Sony A7IV — to activate realistic depth of field and optical character.

Natural imperfections are the point: film grain, slight asymmetry, soft directional shadows, a loose thread, a worn corner. A flawless, symmetric version of any of these scenes reads as fake.

Faces cropped or obscured where possible. This avoids the uncanny-valley risk of AI-generated faces and adds a deliberate sense of mystery consistent with the brand's restraint.

Negative space is a feature, not empty space to be filled with more content.

Logo Usage

The Placedon mark is a private local file, not reproduced inside generated assets directly — it is manually placed by hand into each final composition to avoid publishing it through third-party upload steps.

Placement convention established so far: position the mark where the light is brightest within a composition, so it reads as "the mark being revealed" rather than a sticker placed on top of the image.

Maintain generous clear space around the mark. Do not crowd it with text or competing graphic elements.

Setting This Up as a Real Canva Brand Kit

This account does not currently have a Canva Brand Kit configured. To make every future generated design automatically pull these exact colors and fonts, set one up manually in Canva under Brand Hub, then Brand Kit:

1. Add the six colors above by hex code, using the names given here so they stay identifiable
2. Upload the two typefaces if licensed, or the closest available substitutes
3. Upload the actual logo file directly in the Brand Kit uploader — this is the one safe way to get the private logo file into Canva without it passing through any public URL
4. Once created, future design generation can reference this kit directly so new assets inherit the palette automatically instead of being manually matched each time
